THE PERSISTENT RAGWEED.

to become master of instead of being mastered by similar conditions.

A Profitable Late Crop.

In the Vegetable Garden.

Funkhams are heavy feeders and need a deep soil well manured for best results.

A white pine cucumber is preferred by many for pickles.

The usual remedy for potato blights is paris green, applied in either dry or liquid form.

A good trap, to be had at a reasonable price from any hardware dealer, is the money against moles.

If you promise your boy an animal on the first of June, you had better get a California Fruit Grower advises that you fulfill your obligations to the letter.

A French authority tells that if potatoes are planted in a row with a row of alfalfa or a row of clover, the alfalfa or clover will keep the potatoes free from the potato beetle.

In the summer season the hens on the range secure a large share of food that is not fit for human consumption.

To attempt to feed a pig on waste food compels the owner to wait until the pig matures, but the hen will begin laying early in the season.

A small flock pays better than a large one.

The idea is now advanced that there is a question between hard winters and good honey crops.

A beekeeper recommends candy pails as the best and cheapest thing for extracting honey.

A Canadian apiarist is of opinion that bees wear out, and die more quickly in winter weather or in windy localities than in a country where the weather is mild.

Italian bees are said to be more energetic in resisting the attacks of the bee mite than are the common black bees.

As a rule, most invasion means a weak, queenless colony and neglect.
